Film gives local music big exposure

LINDA CAILLOUET

TUNING IN: Remember local musician Shannon Boshears, also a marketing specialist at Arkansas Children's Hospital, who recently signed with director and writer Joey Lauren Adams to have one of her songs used in Adams' movie Come Early Morning? On Tuesday, Boshears checked out the movie's Web site, www.comeearlymorningthefilm.com and found a pleasant surprise.

"I thought, 'Wouldn't it be funny if my song was playing in the background?' she says. "Well, it was." Not only that, but her name and the song's title, "If Anyone Asks," were prominently displayed above the main photo of actress Ashley Judd. The song, off of Boshears' CD, Chicksinger, can be heard as the film's credits roll. Boshears should prepare herself for some possible national attention;

the movie, which premiered at Sundance Film Festival in Park City, Utah, last Friday has been well received by critics, including Roger Ebert, who declares Judd's work in it "one of the best performances of her career." ROLL OUT THE RED CARPET: Speaking of Come Early Morning, can Central Arkansans expect a local screening of the film? Word is Adams says yes. Stay tuned....
